

This is more of a simulation problem.

You need to maintain state indicating which direction you are traversing to (left to right, right to left, top to down, down to top) and then know when to change the directions.

Note that in each direction, either row or column remains constant.

Based on the constant row or column, you can predict when to change the direction.